

Synopsis:
By Sebastian Casares

Title: Prisoner Of The Dream

Genre: Sci-Fi/ Realism

Logline:

In a future city with a heavily manipulated and complex population, dreams have become a tangible good which free's someone from there mundane causcience; during the manufacturing of one of these dreams, the pilot makes a mistake and struggles to exit his own creation.

-

Arthur is a dreams dealer, he and his partner George have been saving service credits to afford the best High-school in the city. To ensure their success in the school Arthur agreed to a last dream deal for a mysterious woman with an all but normal request. Arthur reluctantly agrees and gets to work on the dream level and dream scape. During a seemingly routine test run and final check of the dream level, Arthur makes an unexpected error in the system boot up of the proposed dreams in-planted sub-conscience. When trying to fix his mistake Arthur causes a automatic reset of the level and is left to figure out how to exit is own dream with his own in-planted subconscious, but in someone else's dream. When the obvious doesn't work, Arthur is left to struggle for his sanity and a rescue from his partner George. During this time Arthur is left to question his life goals and this mysterious dreamer's request as well as the individual. Arthur has to come to terms with himself before he can attempt an appropriate reboot and escape from the dream.